The Gastograph.

At the meeting of the Medical Society of the county of New York Monday Dr. Max Finhorn read a paper entitled, "Demonstration of the Gastrograph."

The gastrograph in appearance resembled a "ticker," but it was constructed to record the motions in the stomach of a patient under treatment.

Restorest be Senses of Taste and Smell. It will care Hay-fever. A particle is applied in stomach of a patient under treatment.

The movements of the food as it undergoes chemical action are carefully and minutely recorded by means of electricity.

ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren street, New York.

Two of Dr. Einhorn's patients were brought before the members of the Medical Society. A dry electric battery was connected with the gastograph. A brass bulb at the end of an Medical Society. A dry electric battery was connected with the gastograph. A brass bulb at the end of an electric wire was put into the mouth of a subject and swallowed. A connection was then made with the electric wire from the patient's stomach and the machine.

The patient first operated upon was the patient first operated upon was the patient stoperated upon was the patient s catarrh of the stomach. This patient swallowed the brass ball and the coil of electric wire with difficulty, and took frequent draughts of water. The gastrograph was set in motion and the slow action of this patient's digestive organs was apparent.

The medical men were invited from their seats to inspect the indicator at short range. The novelty of the ap-paratus and the experiment caused the members of the society to crowd around the operating physician and his willing subject. The taking of the brass ball from the patient's stomach was no easy task. The doctor pulled with care. The brass bulb was finally yanked out of the man's throat and the patient seemed relieved.

To Signal from the Grave.

Hubert Devan, a French Canadian, has had patented an invention which he calls a "grave signal." He is now in Pittsburg for the purpose of having his signal manufactured. Devan has workunfortunates who may be buried alive. the collin. The pipe will extend be-yond the plate and within a fraction of CHINES. an inch from the head of the corpse Through the centre of the pipe, a plain smooth stick is placed, one end of which rests on the forehead of the person in the coffin; the other end of the stick is in the glass globe, with red cloth attached. The moment the person comes to life and moves, the stick will be forced through the forehead of the person. At the same time the signal is displayed, a number of small apertures open at the base of the globe, and resh air is forced down the pipe and into the nostrils of the supposed corpse. When the pipe and appliances are fixed to the coffin, the grave is filled up in the usual way, leaving about two feet of pipe, with the bulb attached, protruding above ground. The inventor is person to the supposed to the coffin, the grave is filled up in the usual way, leaving about two feet of pipe, with the bulb attached, protruding above ground. The inventor pipe, and the red cloth-the signalground. The inventor claims that in catalepsy a person may be dead to all intents and purposes for a period of eight days, but never for a longer time. Some one could be hired to of catalepsy or kindred aliments, or relatives could visit the graves daily. According to Devan, the way has been opened to do away with the haunting fear so many people have of being
